Shooting rampage a 'cowardly act': Obama

Washington, D.C.

Ex-military man involved in attack at naval complex that leaves 13 dead

The U.S. capital became the latest American city to grapple with sickly familiar scenes of chaos and bloodshed Monday when a former military man opened fire at the city's heavily guarded Navy Yard, killing 12 people.

After the gunman was also killed in a shootout with police, authorities warned there could be two other potential perpetrators still at large. But at a late-night news conference, Cathy Lanier, D.C.'s police chief, said Aaron Alexis, a 34-year-old one-time navy reservist, acted alone.

The FBI appealed to the public to come forward with information about Alexis, who was working as a military contractor after being discharged from the navy two years ago. He was born in New York City but most recently resided in Fort Worth, Texas.

The FBI said that despite initial reports that Alexis entered headquarters at the Navy Yard complex with a stolen ID, he had a valid pass due to his work as a military contractor.

Eyewitnesses said the gunman situated himself at a fourth-floor overlook and was shooting down at people at the cafeteria on the first floor. He had an assault rifle, a shotgun and a pistol, police added.

Alexis was investigated in Fort Worth three years ago when he was arrested for shooting a hole through the ceiling of his home and into a neighbour's apartment.

He was also investigated for shooting out the tires of another man's car in Seattle in 2004. His father told police his son suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder.

Charges pending

Alcohol suspected in highway crash that killed three

Drunk driving is suspected in a crash that killed three young men on a highway in southern Saskatchewan.

RCMP said on Monday that charges are pending against a 23-year-old man who was allegedly at the wheel of a truck that rolled off Highway 2, south of Moose Jaw, on Sunday night, leaving three men dead and three other men injured.

The single-vehicle crash happened at about 11:30 p.m., when the northbound Chevrolet Avalanche left the highway and rolled several times down an embankment.

RCMP said they believe alcohol was a factor in the crash, adding that at least some of the truck's occupants were not wearing seatbelts.

Of the six men aged 21 to 24 in the Avalanche, two were initially pronounced dead at the scene, two were flown to hospital by STARS air ambulance in critical condition and two were taken to Moose Jaw Union Hospital with non-life-threatening injuries.

One of the men airlifted to Regina General Hospital died from his injuries on Monday. RCMP confirmed he was 24 years old.

"Mostly, right now, we're still actively trying to track down next of kin," Sgt. Dean Bohlken of the Moose Jaw detachment told Metro, declining to give further details on the driver and passengers — including their hometowns.

"Until this investigation is finished and we have tracked everybody down, I'm not going to say anything about where they were working or anything."

Bohlken said Mounties are in a preliminary stage of the investigation and that they may not have an update for several days.

Knife sought in stabbing case

Warman. 13-year-old boy appears in court, accused of attempting to kill 13-year-old girl

MORGAN MODJESKI
morgan.modjeski@metronews.ca

RCMP are asking residents in Warman for help locating a knife used in a brutal stabbing of a 13-year-old girl on Friday night.

The girl, who can't be named publicly because of her age, was allegedly attacked at about 10 p.m. by a 13-year-old boy in an alley near her home in the small city just northeast of Saskatoon.

Officers were given the name of the suspect by the victim. Two hours after the attack, they located the boy, who faces a charge of attempted murder.

Police explained on Monday that they're trying to determine a motive, though they said the two children know each other. Investigators are trying to find the weapon they believe was used in the stabbing.

"It's always important to find the weapon in a case like this," said Sgt. Warren Gherasim, who oversees the Warman RCMP detachment, noting the girl had been stabbed in the lower body, torso, arms and neck.

"It's probably the most crucial physical evidence that can link a suspect to a victim and tie an offence together, so I would say it's extremely important."

Counsellors at Prairie Spirit School Division, where both children are students, are helping youth and staff deal with emotional effects of the incident.

"We think being prepared to offer those supports (is) critical," John Kuzbik, director of education, said on Monday.

"When students come to your classroom door, we assume that they're ready to learn and if they're unsettled or they need a different type of support for the day ... and obviously this is a very tragic event, we are prepared to offer them what they need."

The accused made a brief appearance in Saskatoon provincial court on Monday and will be back in court on Tuesday morning.

Any member of the public who finds the knife is advised not to touch it and to contact police, RCMP said.

RCMP Sgt. Warren Gherasim speaks with reporters in Warman on Monday about the stabbing of a teenage girl.

Janice MacKinnon named one of Canada's top women

Women of Influence magazine. Ex-minister was critical to getting Sask. finances on track

JACOB MORGAN
saskatoon@metronews.ca

When Janice MacKinnon was elected minister of finance in 1993, Saskatchewan was a very different place.

She was recognized last month when Women of Influence magazine named her one of the top 25 most influential Canadian women.

"Part of it is your whole career, but it also focuses on what you've done in the last year because it is an annual selection," explained MacKinnon.

"The past would have been (my role) as minister of finance, but I think the current could have been that I got into the Order of Canada this year."

MacKinnon was minister up until 1997 and said this was a turbulent time in the province's history.

"We were really on the verge of bankruptcy, so we had to make some difficult decisions," she said.

Her strategy included some unpopular but necessary decisions, she said, such as temporary tax increases and cuts to services.

"While we cut dramatically, we also ensured that there was kind of a fairness involved in it," she said. "We actually increased some of the support for very-low-income people."

Much of her success, she said, was due to being in the perfect time and place.

"In the 1990s there was a view, particularly in the NDP, which was the party I was involved in, that you needed more women in politics."

Today MacKinnon continues to put her expertise to use chairing federal Finance Minister Jim Flaherty's economic-advisory council and instructing grad students at the University of Saskatchewan on the economics of public health.

She said that there are still challenges for women getting into politics but that the road has become more equal.

"The majority of premiers in big provinces are women," she said. "It happened overnight ... and that should be encouraging."

Pair see 71 charges each in pin-pad theft

More than 140 charges have been laid against two men accused of pin-pad theft across Canada.

A release from the Saskatoon Police Service said both men, Paul Bell, 33, and Eric Cleland, 54, are facing 71 charges each.

The men were arrested on Aug. 22 at 11 p.m. when a patrol officer recognized a van matching a description given by the Brandon Police Service of a vehicle connected to the theft in Manitoba.

Inside the van, police found a number of pin-pad machines and credit cards, all believed to be stolen.

Police in Saskatoon are continuing to work with agencies across Canada, including those in Regina, Brandon and Winnipeg.

More charges are expected as the investigation continues. Both men are scheduled to appear in court this week. METRO

UN: 'Convincing evidence' of chemical attack in Syria

Inspection. Still not clear who's to blame as war crimes panel says they're investigating 14 suspected attacks

Careful not to blame either side for a deadly chemical weapon attack, UN inspectors reported Monday that rockets loaded with the nerve agent sarin had been fired from an area where Syria's military has bases, but said the evidence could have been manipulated in the rebel-controlled stricken neighbourhoods.

The U.S., Britain and France jumped on evidence in the report — especially the type of rockets, the composition of the sarin agent and trajectory of the missiles — to declare that President Bashar Assad's government was responsible.

Russia, Syria's closest ally, called the investigators' findings "deeply disturbing," but said it was too early to draw conclusions. The Syrian government's claims that opposition forces were responsible for the attack "cannot be simply shrugged off," Russian Ambassador Vitaly Churkin insisted.

The conclusions represented the first official confirmation by impartial scientific experts that chemical weapons were used in Syria's civil war, but the inspectors' limited mandate barred them from identifying who was responsible for the Aug. 21 attack.

"This is a war crime," UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon told the Security Council. "The results are overwhelming and indisputable. The facts speak for themselves."

Ban called it "the worst use of weapons of mass destruction in the 21st century."

The deep division between Western backers of rebels seeking to overthrow Assad and Russian and Chinese supporters of the regime has paralyzed the UN Security Council since the Syrian conflict began two and a half years ago.

Even though the United States and Russia agreed Saturday on the framework to put Syria's chemical weapons stockpile and precursors under international control for future destruction, their top diplomats were at odds Monday over a new Security Council resolution that would make the deal legally binding — and whether there should be a reference to possible military enforcement if Syria doesn't comply.

In Geneva, the chairman of a UN war crimes panel said it is investigating 14 suspected chemical attacks in Syria, dramatically escalating the stakes. Paulo Sergio Pinheiro said the panel had not pinpointed the chemical used or who is responsible. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

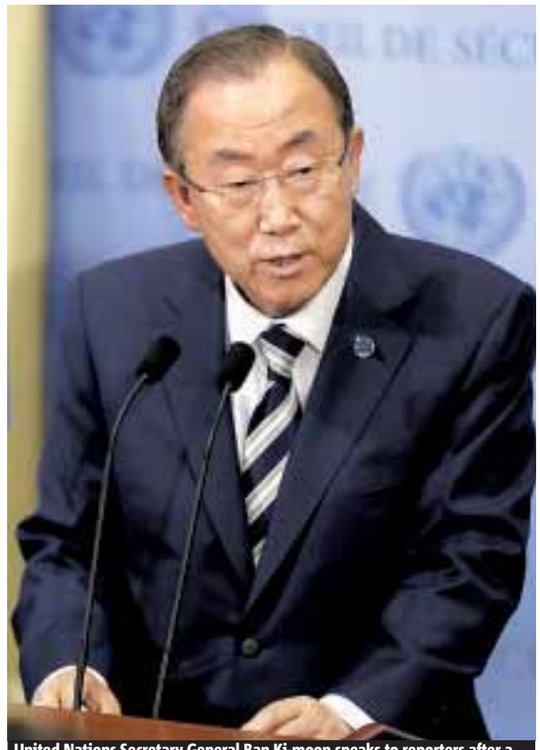
Wandering helicopter

Turks down Syrian pilots

A Turkish fighter jet shot down a Syrian military helicopter on Monday after it entered Turkish airspace and ignored repeated warnings to leave, an official said.

The helicopter strayed two kilometres into Turkish airspace, but crashed inside Syria after being hit by missiles fired from the jet, Turkey's deputy prime minister, Bulent Arinc, told reporters.

Arinc said he did not have any information on the fate of the Syrian pilots, but Rami Abdul-Rahman, director of the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights, said rebel fighters captured one of the pilots, while the fate of the other one was unclear.



United Nations Secretary General Ban Ki-moon speaks to reporters after a Security Council meeting about Syria. UN inspectors said Monday there is "clear and convincing evidence" that chemical weapons were used on a relatively large scale in an attack last month that killed hundreds of people. Canadian scientists protest government muzzling, funding cuts

Hundreds of frustrated scientists clad in their telltale white lab coats descended Monday on Parliament Hill to demand that the Harper government stop muzzling scientists and cutting research funding.

"What do we want? Evidence-based decision-making!" chanted the protesters as they gathered in the shadow of the Peace Tower, complaining about what they see as the government's efforts to commercialize research.

The very fact that such a typically apolitical group felt the need to make their voices heard speaks volumes, said Jeremy Kerr, a biology professor at the University of Ottawa.

"As a commentary on the state of affairs, when people like me start showing up wearing their lab coats having come from their laboratories, things are pretty bleak," Kerr told the crowd.

The fundamental message is "simplicity itself," Kerr said: "Sound policy needs sound science."

Scientists rally on Parliament Hill on Monday as Canadian scientists and their supporters hold demonstrations across the country, calling on the government to stop cutting scientific research funding. SEAN KILPATRICK/THE CANADIAN PRESS

"The facts do not change just because the Harper government has chosen ignorance over evidence and ideology over honesty."

The Ottawa rally was part of a national series of "Stand Up for Science" protests taking place across the country, organized by Ottawa-based science advocacy group Evidence for Democracy.

The group argues that evidence-based decision-making must inform governmental funding decisions on science. They say current funding has instead shifted towards commercialization of research. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Mexico. At least 34 dead after two different storms cause flooding, landslides

The remnants of Hurricane Ingrid and Tropical Storm Manuel drenched Mexico's Gulf and Pacific coasts with more torrential rains Monday, flooding towns and cities, cutting highways and setting off landslides in a national emergency that federal authorities said had caused at least 34 deaths.

The Mexican government said the country had not seen a similar weather crisis since 1958, when the country was simultaneously hit by two tropical storms on separate coasts.

The governor of the Gulf Coast state of Veracruz announced that 12 people died when a landslide smashed into a bus travelling through the town of Altotonga, about 40 miles northwest of the state capital. Gov. Javier Duarte said the death toll could grow as bodies were recovered.

More than 23,000 people fled their homes in the state due to heavy rains spawned by Ingrid, and 9,000 went to emergency shelters. At least 20 highways and 12 bridges had been damaged, the state's civil protection authority said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Quebec's charter of values is doomed, Harper predicts

Controversial proposal. PM notes that despite PQ's efforts, proposed ban on religious garb has less than stellar support within province

The Harper government has promised to intervene legally if it determines the PQ's values charter violates fundamental rights. JONATHAN HAYWARD/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Prime Minister Stephen Harper has predicted that the Parti Québécois' controversial values charter will fail because of opposition within Quebec.

Harper made his first remarks since the Quebec government released a plan last week that would bar people with religious headwear from working in the public service.

Harper was asked Monday about the controversial proposal, following the release of a poll on the subject.

"I do not see the charter in its current form going anywhere," Harper said. "I think the common sense of Quebecers will force this towards a reasonable conclusion."

Despite the PQ's efforts to turn the debate into a Quebec-versus-Canada squabble, Harper noted that the support is also less than stellar within Quebec.

Harper pointed out that none of the other three parties in the Quebec legislature supports the plan in its current form. He was speaking after the release of a poll that suggested a split in public opinion — although the response specifically from francophones was 49 per cent support for the PQ plan, 34 per cent opposed and 17 per cent refusing to answer. That finding suggests a notable shift from similar polls before the plan was formally introduced, when a crushing majority had expressed support for a charter like the one the PQ proposed.

$1 million. RCMP kept quiet on long-gun costs with info in hand

The RCMP repeatedly stonewalled media inquiries for months about the price tag for destroying the federal long-gun registry data, even though the force had a full cost estimate in hand.

The Mounties had a detailed breakdown more than a year ago that showed fulfilling the Conservative promise to kill the registry would cost about $1 million.

A presentation laying out the plan and its costs was provided under an Access to Information request following an 11-month delay.

In the meantime, RCMP officials refused to answer questions about whether any such costing had been done, saying only that any spending related to the registry's destruction would come out of the force's own budget.

NDP justice critic Francoise Boivin says the RCMP's handling of the file calls into question whether its communications can be trusted on bigger issues - including the current Senate investigation of improper expense claims.

"They should have volunteered this (information) showing how much it cost. Instead, by stonewalling they make us think the worst," Boivin said in an interview.

There seems to be "some type of unwritten law of silence" across the Harper government, but secrecy on routine matters by the Mounties is particularly damaging, Boivin said.

"It's sad when it comes from an agency like the RCMP that is there to uphold the law. They're supposed to be leaders in this society on how to behave well," she said. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Sexist tweets

Three firefighters turn fired-fighters

Three Toronto firefighters have lost their jobs over inappropriate comments made on social media.

Toronto Fire Chief Jim Sales says the firings are the result of an internal investigation launched after a media report in August said two firefighters posted sexist messages on Twitter.

Sales says those two firefighters along with a third have now been let go after the probe discovered "significant findings" of inappropriate social media use and public comments that ran afoul of city policies.

A spokesman for the Toronto Professional Fire Fighters' Association had suggested the tweets were referencing quotes from a TV show. THE CANADIAN PRESS

320 km, $30,000

GM working on electric car that goes farther for less

As automakers race to make cheaper electric cars with greater battery range, General Motors is working on one that can go 320 kilometres per charge at a cost of about $30,000, a top company executive said.

Vice-President of Global Product Development Doug Parks wouldn't say when or if such a car will be built.

Currently GM sells the $35,000 Chevrolet Volt plug-in hybrid, which can go 61 kilometres on electricity before a gas-powered generator kicks in. It also offers the all-electric Chevy Spark subcompact that can go 132 kilometres on a charge. It starts at $26,685.

Daughter of labourer eyes graduate degree; father sells family's land to help pay tuition

In a country where many girls are still discouraged from going to school, Sushma Verma is having anything but a typical childhood.

The 13-year-old girl from a poor family in north India has enrolled in a master's degree in microbiology, after her father sold his land to pay for some of his daughter's tuition in the hope of catapulting her into India's growing middle class.

Verma finished high school at the age of seven and earned an undergraduate degree at 13 — milestones she said were possible only with the sacrifices and encouragement of her uneducated and impoverished parents.

"They allowed me to do what I wanted to do," Verma said in an interview Sunday, speaking her language of Hindi. Verma lives a very modest life with her three younger siblings and her parents — eating, sleeping and studying alongside them in a cramped single-room apartment in Lucknow, in Uttar Pradesh.

Sushma Verma's first choice was to become a doctor, but she cannot take the test to qualify for medical school until she is 18. "So I opted for the M.Sc. and then I will do a doctorate."

Verma — a skinny, poised girl — is not the first high-achiever in her family. Her older brother was one of India's youngest computer science graduates at 14. For Verma, her father sold his only land for $400 to cover some of her fees.

Men will now help man the Butterball line

This year if you call Butterball's Turkey Talk Line for some cooking advice, you might get a male voice on the line.

For the first time, Butterball is enlisting the help of men as well as women for its Turkey Talk Line during the holidays. And the turkey seller is seeking the first male talk-line spokesman this year, as well.

The talk line, which is 32 years old this year, has long offered advice to anyone overwhelmed by making the perfect turkey on the holidays.

It has been improving its services, last year launching a smartphone app, Facebook live chats, Pinterest posts and other social media tools. But the line, which has grown from six operators to 60 since it launched in 1981, has never hired men before. "We have seen more and more men involved in Thanksgiving dinner," said Mary Clingman, director of the Butterball line.

Aerospace. Bombardier's CSeries jet takes test flight

Bombardier's CSeries aircraft completed its maiden flight Monday, in a successful test run of a new narrow-body airplane design that promises to support Canada's aerospace sector and its thousands of jobs.

Thousands of employees, suppliers and invited guests cheered as the gleaming CS100 plane quietly lifted off the runway at Mirabel airport north of Montreal. It landed about 2 1/2 hours later after conducting a fly past.

The pilot exited the test airplane waving and lauding the aircraft's performance, save for one unspecified "minor problem."

"It went very well," Chuck Ellis said.

Earlier, senior company executives gave each other big hugs after the aircraft successfully took off, nearly a decade after it was first introduced and following several delays over nearly nine months.

Company chairman Laurent Beaudoin and his son Pierre, the president and chief executive, said they were very pleased with the inaugural flight. "For me it's a great day, a new step in Bombardier today," the elder Beaudoin said in an interview in between hugs of congratulations and photos with employees. THE CANADIAN PRESS

The court ruled that British company Knut IP Management Ltd.'s product-line name too closely resembled the Berlin Zoo's earlier trademarked brand Knud, and could confuse consumers looking to purchase merchandise related to the zoo's most famous animal. FALL FASHION ON A SHOESTRING

SHE SAYS

metronews.ca

I'm not a fashion writer; I don't know how to theorize about textures or what makes one designer more important than another. But I do take a recreational interest in the clothes I put on my body.

Since I recently bought a new home I now have a mortgage, which in turn means I no longer have a clothing budget. Rather than investing in new designer wares for the season, I've been watching various international fashion weeks unfold through the eyes of stylish Instagram users and taking notes on how to wear my existing clothes in new ways.

And so, inspired by the world of impossibly high-heeled fashion bloggers, here are a few easy wardrobe tweaks to help you look as if you're strutting between runway shows rather than dashing from the office to your local Tim Hortons.

Sleeves are so passé. It's getting cold out there, but if you're still putting your jacket on properly then you're doing it wrong. Rather than slipping into your sleeves, adopt the style de rigueur and casually drape your outerwear over your shoulders instead. A slung-jacket will guard you from the cold (kind of) but is incredibly difficult to maintain unless you keep your elbows glued to your rib cage. To prevent your coat-as-cape from slumping to the ground, remember that this sophisticated look is best worn while standing perfectly still and away from any crowds or strong gusts of wind. Caution: this style is not compatible with purses, cell phone use, public transit or any sort of arm movement.

Hot to crop. Crop tops made a valiant return this summer and the trend is sticking around for fall with a few additional layers to offset the chill brought on by a bare midriff. But there's no need to spend $50 on a half a shirt when you can take a DIY approach instead. If you've got a pair of scissors, then you've got yourself a closet full of crop tops.

All white everything. Head-to-toe white is officially a thing now which means you don't have to stow away half your wardrobe once Labour Day has come and gone. Technically, winter white should be more of a creamy shade, but budget conscious individuals can simply repurpose their existing white jeans by trading boat shoes for boots. Keep in mind, there is a definite expiry date on any monochromatic white ensemble. Pale bottoms should be retired for the season once the snow begins to fall unless you fancy a grey slush splatter print creeping up the back of your legs.

Cap it all off. Every good Canadian owns at least one toque and finally the rest of the world is catching up with us. Now that these effortlessly cool knits have made the leap from skating rinks to street style, it's time to dig through that collection of slouchy caps hiding at the back of your closet. Not only are colourful toques a playful way to update your outfit, you'll also get bonus points for actually being practical in colder temperatures. Fashion and function together at last.

Shipwreck wrested from reef

MARCO SECCHI/GETTY IMAGES

Parbuckling begins on Costa Concordia

The parbuckling project to raise the stricken Costa Concordia continued Monday in Isola del Giglio, Italy. Efforts are underway to right the vessel, which sank on Jan. 12, 2012.

If the operation is successful, it will then be towed away and scrapped.

GETTY IMAGES

Captain on trial

- The Concordia's captain is on trial on the mainland for alleged manslaughter, causing a shipwreck and abandoning the ship during the chaotic and delayed evacuation. Capt. Francesco Schettino claims the reef wasn't on the nautical charts for the liner's cruise.

Submerged side damaged by sea

Images transmitted by robotic diving vehicles indicated that the submerged side of the cruise ship's hull had suffered "great deformation" from all its time on the granite seabed, battered by waves and compressed under the weight of the ship's 115,000 tons, engineer Sergio Girotto said.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Largest vessel to undergo manoeuvre

The operation, known in nautical parlance as parbuckling, was used on the USS Oklahoma in 1943 after the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. But this 300-metre vessel is the largest cruise ship ever to capsize and subsequently require the complex rotation. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Iron Man 3

Director. Shane Black

Stars. Robert Downey Jr., Gwyneth Paltrow, Don Cheadle

Robert Downey Jr.'s brainiac billionaire Tony Stark calls himself a "piping hot mess," which also describes this third Iron Man saga: a smoking heap of chuckles and knuckles, set to the ring of Jingle Bells and the clang of iron suits and war machines. Stark suffers anxious flashbacks of last year's The Avengers tussle while at the same time cockily daring this year's super villain, a terrorist called the Mandarin (Ben Kingsley), to bring it on, GWB style.

The taunt brings fire to Stark's Malibu pad, but Iron Man 3 actually begins on New Year's Eve 1999, as Stark meets two players who will later demonstrate what "karma" means: sexy botanist Maya Hansen (Rebecca Hall) and frantic nerd Aldrich Killian (Guy Pearce). Jump to 2013 and Stark is dealing with as many challenges and threats as writer/director Shane Black (and co-writer Drew Pearce) can stuff into their Plot-a-Matic machine, which includes a fly-apart Iron Man outfit that acts as visual shorthand for Tony's fractured psyche.

He's as arrogant as ever, but strangely reluctant to suit up, even after the Mandarin hits hard.

We need to remind ourselves that this is a comic book movie, where logic stops for popcorn. On this basis, Iron Man 3 offers a few twisted pleasures.

The bountiful extras include deleted and extended scenes, a commentary by Black and Pearce, a gag reel and several making-of featurettes.

Ross Mathews got a boost from Chelsea Handler, who is executive producing his new talk show, Hello Ross. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Living a superfan's dream

Hello Ross. When it comes to celebrity obsession, Ross Mathews is king — and he's got his own show to prove it

With his high-pitch voice, infectious giggle and encyclopedic knowledge of pop culture and entertainment, TV personality Ross Mathews has broken into the in-crowd of Hollywood.

After starting out as Ross the Intern on The Tonight Show, he now counts Gwyneth Paltrow and comedian Chelsea Handler as friends.

Handler is also his boss. She frequently uses him on her round table of commentators on E!'s Chelsea Lately. Now she's executive producing Mathews' own talk show called Hello Ross, airing Fridays on E!

"This really is the show that I always wish existed as a superfan myself," the 33-year-old said in a recent interview.

Hello Ross is different from Chelsea Lately. Handler's show specializes in snark, taking swipes at the latest celebrity gossip. Her interviews tend to knock stars down a few pegs, but Mathews is looking to build them back up on Hello Ross. It's an interactive experience where he both conducts interviews and also helps connect fans with their favourite entertainers.

Celebrities can be tough interviews because they're so rehearsed. And here you come and you're so happy and excited. Has that helped or hurt you?

Being a superfan in a town where a lot of times these interviews are mapped out with talking points, I think it's worked in my favour in terms of you catch people off guard with the energy and the knowledge that I have. It's led to some spontaneous moments.

You love celebrities but you've become one in your own right. What's that like?

I get to go into the parties and I pretend like I'm not freaking out and then I get into my car and I scream and I call my mom and say, "O-M-G, guess who was at the party and guess what they ate and how many chicken fingers they had?" Because I was counting.

You grew up in a small town, Mount Vernon, Wash., loving showbiz from afar. Did people then think you were destined for fame?

Growing up, you know, wanting to do this and being what I am, which is like this cartoon version of like a gay person with a big voice and a high pitch, there were a lot of people who told me, "It's probably not gonna happen for you. Broadcasting? It's probably not the way you should go."

I'm lucky.

Kelly Rowland. The X-Factor judge is looking for passion, not a pretty face

Kelly Rowland has been through the highs and lows of the music industry, with its refusals and disappointments. Being signed, being dropped, being signed, then being placed on a shelf, as she puts it. Today she sits as one of four judges in the third season of the U.S. version of The X-Factor, and she's happy to share what she's learned with contestants this season.

"Coming up in the music industry I ran into people who had some harsh things to say, but I grew more from people who actually were constructive and gave details about how I can grow," she says, "I paid attention to those people and wanted to apply that to the way I'm a judge, because it's about seeing people grow and be better and become something wonderful."

"I think, above anything, people love to see passion, and I think that when it comes to performing, people just want to be entertained. If you're not up there having fun, then how can anybody else who is watching you have fun?"

Rowland says she's looking for fun, but doesn't let that cloud her judgement.

"I've turned someone down because they had a wonderful look and they sounded awful. I don't want them to come into this competition thinking they can get on by their looks. It's more than that."

Britney Spears has signed a two-year contract with Planet Hollywood Las Vegas to be the headliner of a "cool, hip club-like show," per producers. Her pay out is a cool $310,000 per show with the starlet performing 48 shows a year.

The final pay out will be around $15 million a year, per TMZ.com. In May, Spears talked to Shape about how she is training for the gig. "I'm doing 90 minutes of yoga twice a week in addition to a lot of cardio — hour-long sessions three times a week with my trainer, Tony Martinez," she said. "The (Vegas) performances won't be simple — they'll be a massive party from start to finish. And to pull this off, I have to be in top condition and running at full speed."

What would Uncle Phil say? Jaden takes serious jab at school system

Jaden Smith has some novel ideas about education reform. The 15-year-old son of Will and Jada Pinkett Smith took to Twitter for a serious of pontifications about youth and society. "School is the tool to brainwash the youth," he wrote. "If newborn babies could speak they'd be the most intelligent beings on the planet. If everybody in the world dropped out of school we would have a much more intelligent society."

Jaden, for his part, reportedly has been home-schooled since earlier this year when the New Village Leadership Academy — founded in 2008 by his parents with an allegedly Scientology-influenced curriculum — was shut down.

It's time to upgrade to polarized sunglasses

End of summer. Just because the weather is getting cooler doesn't mean you don't still have to be concerned about your eye care

JULIE KAYZERMAN
Metro World News

With light constantly reflecting off of surfaces like water or cars, regular sunglasses just aren't enough to protect our eyes from harmful bouncing UV rays.

The good news is polarized lenses can block light from getting into your eyes and keep you looking younger.

"The huge benefit is that it does reduce that glare," says Kristen McCabe, vice-president of product at Sunglass Hut.

"If you don't have polarized lenses, even if (your shades are) tinted, the light will still pass through. So when the light is getting into your retina, you squint, which can create premature wrinkles. Polarized lenses not only help you see better, but over time they help you look better, too."

What is polarization?

"Polarization, commonly known as glare, occurs when light reflects off a surface, like the ocean, a bright blue sky or the open road."

Ray-Ban Aviators are the most common polarized lense. CONTRIBUTED

How do they work?

"Polarized glasses have special lenses that deflect sun, allowing for a reduction in glare and increased visibility."

- Dolce & Gabbana with gradient polar lenses. "Gradient lenses are just a little bit softer, more feminine looking."
- Prada with oversized gradient polar lenses. "It's an oversize, kind of edgy oval look (offering) that iconic Prada logo."

Half Off check-in: A bump in the road

Two weeks ago we introduced Metro Winnipeg editor Elisha Dacey, who has teamed up with fitness professional Jordan Cieciwa and registered nutritionist Theresa Albert.

Dacey wants to lose half of her body weight and has been writing about it in her online blog, Half Off.

There have been a few recent bumps ("all part of life," says Dacey) including gallbladder surgery, her daughter starting school and an upcoming move into a new house.

"But I'm determined not to go off course," she says. "I'm trying really hard."

While her home exercise program is on hold, there are still ways to be active.

"In fact, the surgery was a good life event to learn how to prepare knowing that she's not going to be able to lift weights," says Cieciwa.

With the doctor's OK, he wants her to do a 30-minute walk twice a day.

"Depending on weather and fatigue, that's my target and I've walked every day since the surgery," says Dacey.

Some days grocery shopping counts as one walk.

Albert suggested stocking her kitchen with easy-to-prepare food choices.

Albert added that when life presents seemingly insurmountable hurdles, you double down.

"I tell people to start small and create habits that help you focus on the positive."

For example, journal at the same time every day and write down three good eating choices and one bad — if there is one.

For other healthy ways to get unstuck, visit metronews.ca/voices/half-off.

For those following along at home, don't stop doing the home exercise program.

This great tasting Asparagus and Leek Soup doesn't use butter or cream. The potato adds the creamy texture without the fat and calories.

1. Trim asparagus; cut stalks into pieces and set tips aside.

2. In nonstick saucepan, heat oil; sauté garlic, onion, leeks and asparagus stalks until softened, approx. 10 minutes.

3. Add stock and potato; reduce heat, cover and simmer for 20 to 25 minutes or until vegetables are tender. Purée in food processor until smooth. Taste and adjust seasoning with salt and pepper. Return to saucepan.

4. Steam or microwave reserved asparagus tips just until tender; add to soup. Serve sprinkled with Parmesan cheese.

Remember when alfalfa sprouts were the stuff of hippies and all the rage? Talk to Roy and Ginny Stewart Love of Roy'L Acres Farm in Grey Highlands in Ontario and they will tell you micro greens are the new "sprouts".

Micro greens are actually grown in soil so the downside and danger of the anaerobic E. coli and salmonella of sprouts started in a closed container can't happen. These babies are simply the beginnings of the whole vegetable.

Loaded with four to six times more nutrients than the full vegetable, trays of peas and beet greens are often used as decor before being snipped into salads and sandwiches.

You will never find a fresher, more nutrient dense vegetable than one that was snipped seconds before it landed on your tongue.

What to look for in micro greens:

- Can't buy these artisanal treats at the grocery store? You will have more luck at small markets,100 mile markets and farmers markets.
- Aim for fresh, bright, perky leaves throughout.
- Try varieties like: popcorn shoot, various mustards, purple kohlrabi, kale, chervil, cilantro, radish, arugula shoots, flax microshoots, fenugreek sprouts and the all familiar wheatgrass.

Goodness of green juice cooked into a hearty meal

1. Heat the oven to 400 F.

2. In saucepan over medium, heat 1 tablespoon of oil. Add onion and cook, stirring occasionally, until softened, about 5 minutes. Add garlic and cook, stirring for 1 minute. Add potatoes, 4 cups of the stock and wine. Bring to boil, cover pan and simmer for 10 minutes.

3. Add kale, cover pan, then simmer another 10 minutes. Add spinach and pepper flakes, cover, and simmer 5 minutes.

4. Working in 2 batches, transfer 3 cups total of soup solids, with little added broth each time, to blender and purée until smooth. Be careful, hot foods expand in blender. Return purée to the saucepan, add salt to taste and the additional cup of stock if necessary to achieve the desired texture. Heat until hot.

5. Meanwhile, set wire rack over rimmed baking sheet. Arrange prosciutto slices in a single layer on the rack, then bake on oven's middle rack 12 minutes, or until they begin to crisp. Remove rack from sheet pan and set it on counter to let the prosciutto cool. When cool, crumble the prosciutto.

6. Arrange the baguette slices in single layer on the sheet pan and brush them with the remaining tablespoon of olive oil. Bake them on the oven's middle shelf until golden brown, 8 to 10 minutes. Sprinkle the grated cheese evenly over them, return the slices to the oven and bake until the cheese is just melted, 1 to 2 minutes.

7. To serve, ladle the soup into 4 bowls, then top each portion with some of the prosciutto crisps and 3 toasts on the side.

Kids' CDs even parents will like Reasons Mommy Drinks. Set fire to that Mickey Mouse Clubhouse album and turn to these 5 gems of musical genius

Real talk. Most children's albums were designed to make parents curl up into a hole and die.

Saccharine and repetitive, they also contain subliminal messaging that instruct children to "cry, scream and throw things in moving vehicles unless you play said album on repeat at loud volumes."

Don't worry, we've culled the hit list down to five albums you might even, gasp, enjoy.

So set fire to that Mickey Mouse Clubhouse CD and hit up iTunes for these gems of jammin' genius.

1. For the Kids.
A three-album compilation by various adult artists, including Canuck crooners Sarah Harmer, The Barenaked Ladies, Sarah McLachlan and Canada's pre-Chavril pop sweethearts Chantal Kreviazuk and Raine Maida. Hooray for Can-Con! Bonus: A portion of the proceeds go to charity. How can you NOT check it out?

2. Jack Johnson Curious George Soundtrack.
It's mellow, catchy and will bring you back to Birkenstock-wearing summers of times past. Chillax, kids.

3. They Might Be Giants No!
Tracks like Robot Parade may actually have you singing along. Ironic and random, kids won't get the level of humour mommy and daddy will take from it.

Not all children's albums will make your ears bleed. ISTOCK

4. Various rad artists, Schoolhouse Rock Rocks.
Dropped in the mid-'90's, bands like Blind Melon and Moby sing old school hits like Three is a Magic Number. Yeah, it is now.

5. Bob Marley Greatest Hits.
Apparently reggae has the same RPMs as a heartbeat and children, especially babies, find it very soothing. Pass the iPod on the left hand side.

How smartphones are changing the way Canadians go shopping

Experts predict by 2014 more local searches will come from smartphones than any other computing device. ISTOCK

Rise of mobility. Today consumers compare prices, make reservations and interact online — over their mobile device

A recent study by market research company eMarketer revealed that more than 10 million Canadians were smartphone owners in 2012.

Mobile devices are eating into personal computing in a big way, and experts predict that by 2014 more local searches will come from smartphones than any other computing device, drastically changing the way people shop and locate information.

Digitization has become a societal issue for small businesses and consumers alike.

"Today, people compare prices, make reservations and interact online to make sure they are getting the biggest bang for their buck and share their shopping experience," says Matthieu Houle, director of digital consumer experiences for Yellow Pages Group.

Tools such as mobile analytics allow businesses to learn from every interaction and predict where, when and how people are most likely to make their next purchase.

A mobile environment allows consumers to connect with the brand. That's why a creative and simple design is key. At the very least, a mobile site that stems from a business's main web page is mandatory. With a site that's optimized for mobile, customers can access a business's important contact information from anywhere.

"Mobile applications, which an increasing number of people are using to optimize their search, take the experience one step further," says Houle.

"Businesses can also optimize their offerings thanks to contextual information or personalization based on data taken from past experiences and individual preferences. For instance, if it rains, maybe your local store runs a mobile campaign offering a special on umbrellas helping match their services with current needs."

Not just a number

"Through interactive mobile sites and search applications, shoppers have easy access to reviews and opinions, meaning every customer experience counts."

Matthieu Houle, director of digital consumer experiences for Yellow Pages Group

As people continue to use an ever-increasing number of devices to get online, digital marketing companies are offering more and more multi-device marketing solutions and are making these options accessible for small businesses.

Local organizations, for which every dollar counts, greatly benefit from these kinds of marketing tools, which help them stand out from the competition and attract customers. NEWS CANADA

NHL. Young players trying to prove themselves take centre stage in chippy affair

The Ottawa Senators defeated the Calgary Flames 4-2 in a pre-season game Monday as both teams road tested new recruits and acquisitions.

The enthusiastic Saskatoon fans arrived decked out in the jerseys of their favourite stars like former Flames captain Jarome Iginla and Sens star Jason Spezza, but that calibre of veteran was nowhere to be seen.

On Monday

Senators	Flames

Instead, the game featured young players working for a roster spot.

Buddy Robinson scored for the Senators midway through the first period, putting up his second goal in as many nights.

This was followed up by a second-period Senators goal by Cory Conacher, assisted by Stephane Da Costa and David Dziurzynski.

Four separate fights broke out in the second period. Senators bruiser Jim O'Brien dished out a particularly bad beating on Calgary forward Ben Hanowski, who was taken off the ice bleeding.

Calgary's David Jones put up an unassisted goal to the top corner in the third, and Corban Knight scored another late in the period.

But Ottawa answered with two goals by Mike Hoffman and Clarke MacArthur, putting the game away.

Flames goalie Reto Berra made an impression with 31 saves. Calgary is under pressure to find a goalie duo after longtime starter Miikka Kiprusoff announced his retirement last week.

Lions forced to think about life without Lulay

Lions No. 1 pivot is dealing with a shoulder injury ahead of this week's clash with the Riders. THE CANADIAN PRESS

The B.C. Lions are preparing for the possibility that quarterback Travis Lulay won't play in a key game against Saskatchewan because of a shoulder injury, but a decision on who would take the snaps in Lulay's place is still up in the air.

B.C. coach Mike Benevides said Monday the club will prepare offensive packages for backup signal-caller Thomas DeMarco and nominal No. 3 Buck Pierce.

"I'm going to get both of those guys, both Buck and Thomas, prepared right away," said Benevides at the club's practice facility.

DeMarco, a second-year pro, has more knowledge of B.C.'s offensive system. But Pierce, a nine-year veteran in his second stint with the Lions after being acquired in a trade from Winnipeg last week, has more CFL experience.

Benevides said he was not ready to make a declaration on who would start if Lulay can't play. Lulay was injured on the weekend while running for a 14-yard touchdown in a 36-14 victory over the Montreal Alouettes.

Lulay was not at the practice facility while reporters were present. Benevides said the QB was getting an MRI exam and could be examined again Tuesday. The coach hopes to be clear on Lulay's status by Wednesday, when the Lions return to practice.

"On Wednesday, I'll have a clearer idea of what I want to do," said Benevides. "We're going to get both (DeMarco and Pierce) prepared, because it's going to take both of them to win a football game."

The Lions (7-4) have a chance to gain a share of second place in the West Division when they visit the Roughriders (8-3) next Sunday in Regina.

Lulay told a Vancouver radio station Monday that his shoulder "stiffened up" overnight following the win over Montreal. He also told The Canadian Press on Sunday that he was feeling stiffness, but Benevides said a team doctor was encouraged by the range of motion that the QB's shoulder displayed following the game.

♉ Taurus
April 21 - May 21
You never like being told what to do but today you must listen to what a friend tells you. If you learn from their mistake, you won't make the same one.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Think first then act decisively. With your ruler Mercury linked to action planet Mars you have what it takes to do something remarkable, something that will be remembered and talked about for many years to come.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
You may have to tell a lie to spare a friend's blushes today but make sure it is only a small one. The last thing you want is to get a rep for dishonesty. Your social standing means more than their red face.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
If you have a good idea today — and you will — make sure you keep it to yourself. Yes, of course, you are a generous soul by nature but if you are too generous others could get rich and famous at your expense.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
The best way to change a habit of some sort is to replace it with a different habit — one that is more positive. If you just try to give up on something today, it won't work. You've got to be cunning.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
It will be all too easy over the next 24 hours to allow yourself to be diverted by things that don't matter and neglect things that do matter. Stay focused.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Someone will try to undermine your reputation today by circulating stories about you that are not true. When you find out who it is, make sure they know, and everyone knows, you are not amused.

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
The latest fad or fashion may be pretty hot but is it right for you? The planets suggest you might like to give this one a miss and wait for something better to spend your time and money on.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
New responsibilities have brought more work and while you are no stranger to giving one hundred per cent, it might be wise to take a break today.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Whatever your personal code of conduct may be, you must live up to it today. If you fall short in any way, your rivals will seize the chance to make you look bad. Make sure you can reach your lofty ideals.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
What happens today won't be wonderful exactly but neither will it be woeful, so stop fearing the worst and get back into the mainstream of life. You know the old saying: You can't win it unless you're in it!
